Jawbone Flats gets their name from a tucked away spot in a protected wilderness area East of Salem. Jawbone Flats is an old abandoned mining town surrounded by some of the most lush old growth forest you'll find in the state. In one sense, it's as Oregon as it gets, and the band that takes its name from the hidden treasure with a music style that incorporates Country and Americana with a "hill country twang!" The five-piece band members have been playing with each other in a wide range of local venues since 2000.
